American peace envoy Dennis Ross is extending his stay by 24 hours to monitor the initial effectiveness of the newly reconstituted security cooperation between Israel and the Palestinian Authority.

PA Chairman Yasser Arafat last night agreed to resume full security coordination with Israel, but asked that the US remain involved as "a witness" to testify that Palestinian efforts are genuine.

In his fourth meeting with Ross, a 45-minute session in Ramallah, Arafat revealed "the good news," which persuad-ed Ross to delay his departure for a day.

Planning Minister Nabil Shaath, one of the participants in the talks, told reporters that "Palestinians agreed to resume full security coordination, but prefer that the American side will be a witness.

This reflects the words of Arafat's adviser Nabil Abu Rodeineh, who said Monday that Arafat wants the US to be a witness and a judge." Abu Rudeineb said last night that he would not describe yesterday's meeting as breakthrough, but hopes it would come in today's Shaath said that the PA would "try to persuade" Israel to accept a permanent US role in security coordination. Ross is expected to meet this morning with Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu to raise this matter, and then to meet again with Arafat at 5 p.m.

Ross said that the efforts would help pare for the visit of Secretary of State Madeleine Albright later this month, and be expressed the bope that the measures would build trust.

A senior government aide lauded the US diplomat for having succeeded in "getting the sides to sit down together and in setting up a mechanism that can bring results." However, he noted that the question yet to be answered is whether this first step will be followed by additional steps "to be taken by the Palestinians."

Ross conferred with Defense Minister Yitzhak Mordechai before entering his fourth round of talks with Nctanyahu and Arafat.

Mordechai reiterated the governmeot's view that it will be impossible to renew the bilateral negotiations with the Palestinians on outstanding issues, or to take the risks ioherent in easing the security measures takco since the Mahaneb Yehuda suicide bombings two weeks ago, until there is convincing evidence the PA is taking practical measures to fight terror-

Sitting in on the Mordechai-Ross meeting were Chief of General Staff Lt-

Gen. Annon Lipkin-Shahak and US Ambassador Martin Indyk.

Commenting on the progress made since his arrival last Saturday night, Ross said, "We have a beginning; we have a step in the right direction, but we need to see results. What we'll be looking for, what we'll be watching, is in fact how this process develops and whether or not it produces results."

He contended that everything must be evaluated by the test of time and that anyone who believes that the problems at hand can be solved in such a short time is not realistic.

Netanyahu agreed with Ross that security is the focal point, noting that it includes the PA's fulfillment of its commitment to fight the terrorist organizations and their infrastructure. We are not interested in meetings for the sake of meetings, Nctanyahu went on. We are interested in meetiogs which are a result of ongoing activities, and in tangible results which we can sec on the ground and which we can discuss at meetings. The prime minister called on the PA to imprison the terrorists' leaders as well as terrorists who are liable to carry out murderous attacks, such as the one at the Mahaneb Yehuda market.

Assad also said Damascus would not accept a peace that did not return the Golan Heights to Syria.

domain of terror groups.

Paraphrasing the points Netanyahu is expected to make, Bar-Illan said "no responsible government can ignore the demands of its security forces when they contend it will be easier to forestall and prevent another terrorist attack if a closure is imposed."

Jordanian Foreign Minister Fayez Tarouneh was quoted by Reuters as saying the monarch will ask the prime minister to modify the sanctions imposed on the PA's population since the Mahaneh Yehuda suicide bombings two weeks ago.

There has been some relaxation of some measures." Tarounch reportedly said, "but we are not satisfied. Many of the steps were totally unjustified."

The least controversial topic to be aired will be Nctanyahu's assessment of American peace envoy Dennis Ross's sessions with Israeli and Palestinian leaders. His briefing on the Ross mission is expected to be positive and complimentary.

However, Netanyahu will stress that his "first responsibility is the safety of Israel's citizens," which he expects Hussein will understand, Bar-Illan said.

Bar-Illan countered Tarouneh's reference to Israel's withholding of revenues from the PA, by alleging that this money "is used mainly for the Palestinian Police." He alluded to charges that PA Police Chief Ghazi Jabali was responsible for the dispatch of personnel on a terrorist mission.

"For us to pay the salaries of those trying to kill us is ludicrous. If we see a change in the PA's stance in dealing with terrorism we will lift the sanctions on a sliding-scale principle," Bar-Illan said.

Immediately after returning from Akaba, Netanyaha will take a four-day vacation. Informed sources said be intends to tour the northern region in a demonstration of solidarity with citizenry living within range of Katyusha rockets.

PM fires Suissa, signs on Reform religious council appointment

By BATSHEVA TSUR and LIAT COLLINS

Minister Binyamin Prime Netanyahu fired Religious Affairs Minister Eli Suissa late last night and signed on the papers making official the appointment of a Reform representative, Dr. Joyce Brenner, to the Netanya Religious Council, Israel

Radio reported. Netanyahu took this step after learning that Suissa, after meeting with Shas mentor Rabbi Ovadia Yosef and MK Aryeb Deri, decided not to resign today, as he had earlier suid he would. Suissa had refused to sign on the appointment, despite the High Court of Justice's ruling last week upholding it.

It was not clear whether Suissa would be reinstated to the post. Religious parties, meanwhile, made plans to introduce bills to circumvent the ruling - a so-called High Court-bypass law, which would have synagogues choose council members. This would ensure that the councils remain bastions of the Orthodox. Media reports say Netanyahu has tacitly agreed. Justice Minister Tzahi Hanegbi was circumspect. "We will have to study this legislation," he said, adding that the attorney-general and Knesset would have to decide "whether it fits with existing legislative norms." At the same time, Conservative and Reform representatives were gearing up to get more members appointed to religious councils.

Deputy Religious Affairs Minister Yigal Bibi, of the National Religious

Party, warned that more such appointments could cause riots. NRP head and Education Minister Zevulun Hammer, who takes over talks from zero and cancel those agreements we spent five years reaching," Assad said, according to Israel Radio.

He also described Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu as "strange" and said he keeps changing his conditions for peace. Assad reportedly described the current situation as "terrible" and said be hopes it does not get worse. "We want peace and if we did not there could not have been a peace process," presidential spokesman Joubran Kourieb quoted Assad as telling the 44-member government and its leader, Shimon Peres. He said it was easier to deal with Labor, although sometimes they argued for months over a single point.

MK Walid Sadek (Meretz) told reporters after the meeting that Assad characterized Netanyahu as "an enemy of peace" and said "his attitude might lead to dire consequences." Assad joked abont Yasser Arafat but said there is no personal enmity between them. "Lately, I have learned things about him I did not know before," Assad reportedly said, but would not elaborate.

His aides say Saxton was motivated by reports the PA had misused contributions and by the suicide bombings in the Mahaneh Yehuda market July 30 that killed 14.

Also, the chairman of the House International Relations Committee, Rep. Benjamin Gilman, is blocking release of $10 million in US assistance to the PA.

The Clinton administration has pledged $500 million to the Palestinians over five years. The aid for education, water, and sewage control skirts restrictions on the PLO by going directly to projects on the West Bank and Gaza.

Frankly speaking, Israel is getting another American import.

Eighty years after Nathan Handwerker, a Polish immigrant, first pitched his hot-dog stand in Coney Island, Brooklyn, Nathan's Famous has granted a hot-dog franchise that is to open 10 restaurants here over the next five years. "Obviously, the fit between Nathan's and Israel is strong," said Rick Bondreaux, Nathan's executive vice president. Will Nathan's go kosher in its home market? "Wc'vc been approached by a group that wants the rights to open a Nathan's kosher format in the United States," said Norbitz.

A Palestinian military court in Nahlus yesterday sentenced to death Fawzi Sawalba, a member of Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat's Force 17 military guard, on charges of collabo-rating with Israel. The case may shed light on the Israeli demand for the extradition of Gaza's police chief.

No information was released in the case to prove Sawalha was a collaborator, but it is apparently linked with the issue of Palestinian police chief Brig. Ghazi Jabali, whose extradition from Gaza Israel bas demanded.

Israel says Jabali ordered attacks on settlers from Bracha in the Nablus area. According to Palestinian security sources. Jabali authorized the abduction of a collaborator named Harb Yunis living in the set-

The court charged Sawalha with leading a masked gang which in June brutally abducted and beat up villagers in Asira a-Shamaliya, north of Nablus in Area B. which is under Israeh security control. Three accomplices in their early twenties received sentences from life to five years. Two of them, Khaldoun Atamneb and Taher Jamlan, also belonged to Force 17. The fourth, Nasser Hamadneh, was a civil-

In court, Sawalha and his alleged accomplices could not be identified by villagers brought as witnesses, because they had been masked during their crimes, nor could the prosecution openly explain why terrorizing villagers made the defendants collabbasis they selected their victims.

Bassem Eid of the Palestinian Human Rights Monitoring Group, who attended four sessions of the trial, said the defendants retracted their confessions in court and gave detailed descriptions of the torture that bad led them to confess. "These included hammer blows to the head, blows to the stomach causing vomiting, and threats to rape their sisters. The judges listened, but did not order an investigation of the claims."

According to Eid, when three policemen were caught near Bracha last month they were on their way to kidnap Yunis, partly to verify the confessions of the four, and partly because he was wanted for trial in his own right. Nablus police turned to a violation of the Oslo Accords, Arafat has refused to arrest Jabali, saying he has no proof that he ordered police to shoot at settlers.

At least 15 people have been sentenced to death in Palestinian security courts, though none of the sentences has been carried out. Half those sentenced are Palestinian policemen, convicted of torture and other human rights violations.

In contrast with earlier security court trials, this one was protracted, lasting nearly three weeks, and several of the sessions were open. In another innovation, the prisoners' confessions were recorded on videotape and later broadcast on local Palestinian television.

An ordinary drowning victim can often be revived without suffering heart damage, but some Maccabiah victims suffered heart failure because they developed respiratory distress only bours or even two days after the accident, the report said.

Israel to sign convict-transfer treaty with Thailand

By BATSHEVA TSUR

Israel and Thailand are to sign a treaty today authorizing the transfer of prisoners from one country to the other.

The agreement fails under a law, passed last year by the Knesset, governing the transfer of prisoners between countries. It enables Israeli citizens serving time in foreign jails to be transferred to Israel where they will continue their imprisonment. The law also allows the same privileges to foreigners imprisoned in Israeli jails.

Three Israelis who have been imprisoned in Thailand for a minimum of eight years will be eligihle to apply to the Thai authorities for mansfer, Justice Ministry spokesman Etty Eshed said yester-day. But another three do not meet the criteria, she said. Most of the Israelis were jailed for drug abuse. The number of Thai citizens jailed in Israel was not available.

According to the agreement, a prisoner must have served a third of his sentence or at least four years in the foreign jail in order to be eligible for transfer. Thailand has signed a similar agreements with six other countries and has stressed that it has especially friendly ties with these countries, Eshed said.

4 yeshiva students held for murder

Four yeshiva students have been arrested in the killing yesterday of Mahmoud Ahu Sara, 74, a gasstation attendant in the Sheikh Jarrah section of Jerusalem. Ahu Sara died trying to prevent the suspects from driving off without paying for gas. Late yesterday afternoon, two yeshiva students, aged 18 and 22, apparently passengers in the car, gave themseives up to police.

Police had sought arrest warrants for the other two, whose identities were known to them, hut the two - one of whom is the driver - turned themselves in before the warrants could be served. The two remaining suspects, also yeshiva students, are 20 and 15. All four are to he hronght before a judge today for a remand hearing.

After their car filled up at the gas station early yesterday morning, the driver attempted to speed off without paying for the gas.

Ahu Sara grabbed onto one of the car's windows in an attempt to get the driver to stop. The driver kept going, however, and dragged the attendant hanging from the window for several hundred meters, until the car passed close to a line of parked vehicles and Abu Sara was slammed into a stationary van and fell to the ground. A Magen David Adom doctor pronounced him dead,

The four later abandoned the car. (Itim)

Plan to raise unemployment

Hanna Kim writes in Ha'aretz that it is not certain the Treasury's "plan to increase growth," which is being considered by the cahinet, will do so. What is certain ia that the plan will increase unemployment, harm the pension rights of the workers who haven't been fired yet and shatter the stahility of the last safe saving fund they have left.

The damage to the workers' pension plans is especially malicious, notes Kim, since it pnts the workers in a state of constant uncertainty: They know how much they pay each month for their pension, but they don't know how much they'll get in return when they retire. At the same time, people fired after 20 to 25 years of work are going to find it harder to collect unemployment compensation, as

Conservatives to pursue complaint against police

By JONATHAN TEPPERMAN and news agencies

A Conservative Jewish group that was forcibly ejected from the Western Wall plaza on Monday night for holding a mixed prayer service raised new questions yesterday about the propriety of the police action against it, claiming that they had received the nod for the service from the authorities.

So far, what is certain is that roughly 200 members of an cgalitarian prayer group were pushed from the plaza Monday night by police, who had originally assigned the group a cordoned-off area in which to hold their Tisha Ba'ay armite Be'av service.

What is also certain is that the cviction followed an order from Odcd Weiner, director of the Religious Affairs Ministry's Holy Sites Authority, who decided that the group's co-ed prayers violated the religious customs governing the Western Wall.

Weiner was unavailable for comment yesterday because his office was closed for Tisha Be'av. Police are claiming that the eviction was necessary to protect the Conservatives from the threat of violence posed by angry haredim who surrounded the Conservatives once their egalitarian service began.

According to Jerusalem police chief Cmdr. Yair Yitzhaki, "there were thousands of worshipers present, and it looked as though their feelings were offended." But Conservative spokesman Einat Ramon disputes this claim. First, she points out that the mixed service should not have been prob-

"There were a few lematic since it did not occur right in screaming and cursing - but instead front of the Wall, where men and of stopping them, the police attacked women are separated, but rather in us. Once it refused, however, Sacks says that police told the group that they did not in fact need permission, and that they would be protected by the police so long as their actions were "in keeping with the custom of the place.' Just what is the "custom of the place" remains unclear. According to Weiner, local custom precludes mixed prayer anywhere in the Western Wall area. But Hilah Keren, legal counsel for the Conservative movement, says that the group has held egalitarian prayers in the outer area over 100 times before, and since objections bave rarely been raised, they now constitute legitimate local custom.

According to members of the Conservative group, the police response was not only inappropriate but was also excessive. "People were punched and pushed," Rabbi Ehud Bendel told Army Radio. Young women were knocked down in the most terrible manner, and I myself am still rabbing sore ribs." "Wc felt they were unreasonably violent," added Ramon. "It wasn't enough to kick us ont of the plaza - they pushed us out of the Old City! Even if Weiner gave an order that we had to leave the Wall, should he have been able to stop us from praying in a bus station in the Old City?

Police have promised to look into the matter. Yitzhaki said yesterday that "if there was reckless force used by one or two police officers, we will investigate those complaints."

By JONATHAN TEPPERMAN

Some 50 members of the Temple Mount Faithful observed Tisha Be'av yesterday by attempting to enter and pray on the Temple Mount. When repulsed by police, the group staged a sit-in and prayer session, blocking the western entrance to the Mount for almost three hours.

The agents of the murderer Arafat control the Temple Mount and want to take Jerusalem from the Jewish people," said Gershon Salomon, the group's leader. "We came here to protest against this terrible situation, in which Jews cannot walk free in the third commonwealth, but must come to the place like foreigners."

Accompanying the group of approximately 100 zealots was Yebuda Etzion, who is barred from the Mount following several recent arrests for violat-

Rabbinate have treated us like dogs and chased us away from our proper place and our heritage. It should be holiest place in Israel," he said.

In staging their attempt, members of the group ignored warnings from police and the Chief Rabbinical Council, which has forbidden Jews from praying in the area. They also disregarded the warning of Wakf head Adnan Husseini, who recently told the Voice of Palestine radio that Jewish attempts to pray on the Temple Mount would be met with violence.

After reading from the Book of Lamentations for over an hour, members of the Temple Mount Faithful wandered down into the Western Wall plaza and into the Old City. Dressed in sackcloth, baseball hats, and chains, waving banners and flags, they set off oo a march through the Moslem Quarter, chanting "Jerusalem for Jews" and "The Temple Mount is for Jews."

WASHINGTON (Washington Post) - President Bill Clinton, exercising a power that presidents have coveted for more than a century, used his new line-item veto authority Monday to strike down three items in the tax and spending bills he signed into law last week.

Clinton said his vetoes would ensure that nadonal interests prevail over narrow interests" by eliminating what he called "unjustifiable or wasteful" spending and tax breaks that would cost an estimated $615 million over five years.

But his action drew sharp protests from those it affected as well as Republicans who said it violated the spirit of the hipartisan budget accord celebrated at a White House signing ceremony last week.

The line-item veto law, which Clinton signed last year and which was part of the GOP's "Contract With America" before the 1994 cial-interest measures that are routinely attached to major legislation to avoid a debate on their merits.

Aides said Clinton, despite what officials called urgings of caution from Treasury Secretary Robert Rubin, was determined to use the authority at the first opportunity. In an Oval Office ceremony Monday, he said the vetoes would serve for lawmakers as a "deterrent against the most egregious kinds of projects that would otherwise not be funded." But his action Monday raised the prospect of protracted campaigns to overtum the vetoes in Congress or to challenge the constitutionality of the entire line-item veto law in the courts. Two of the items Clinton vetoed were from the tax side of the balanced-budget accord he enacted and one was from the spending side. All three involved highly complicated provisions - not the local road projects, tourism subsidies and the elections, is designed to give the president the ability to reject spespending.

One of the tax vetoes was against a provision that would allow USbased insurance companies, banks and investment firms to delay taxes from overseas income. Administration officials said the measure, with an estimated cost of $317 million over five years, had some merit but was loosely drawn and could be easily abused to allow businesses to use off-shore tax havens to escape paying taxes. The other tax veto was against an item that administration and congressional tax experts said would primarily benefit a single transaction: the sale by a Texas businessman of sugar beet processing plants to a Utah-hased cooperative of farmers. The savings are estimated at $98 million a year. Finally, on the spending side, Clinton struck down a measure that let New York State operate under special rules that allowed it to get bigher Medicaid payments from the federal government. Treasury officials estimated the five-years savings on this to be $200 million.

Gov. George Pataki (R) called the veto a "body blow" to his state's health care system, and pledged that hia administration "will fight in Congress and in the courts" to reverse the veto.

House Speaker Newt Gingrich, a champion of the line-item veto, objected to Clinton's using it on tax and spending bills that had been passed after protracted bipartisan negotiations.

A spokeswoman said Gingrich fell "blindsided" by Clinton's action, and said the fact that administration officials waited until the budget aecord was reached before raising the objecoons showed "these veloes may have less to do with sound policy and more to do with petty politics.

New veto no panacea

By CLAY CHANDLER

and the second second

WASHINGTON (Washingtoo Post) - In wielding his line-item veto pen for the first time Monday, President Clinton said he meant to "send a signal that the Washington rules have changed for good." Apparently, the signal lost something in transmission.

Even as Clinton scratched three narrow proposals from balanced budget and tax legislation he signed last week, interest groups - along with the lawmakers and lobbyists who represent them - were hatching legislative and political strategies to protect such future provisions from a similar fate. Tax proposals in particular offer many opportunities to circumvent the intention of the president's new authority.

The conclusion drawn by many Washington budget experts was not that the line-item veto had abolished what Clinton called "the old game of slipping a provision into a massive bill in hope that no one will notice." Rather, the dominant view was that Clinton's use of his new veto powers means simply the old game will now require a bit more skill.

Interest groups "are going to take much greater care in drafting their provisions," said Rick Grafmeyer, director for tax policy at the accounting firm of Erist & Finance Committee staffer.

بالمراجعي يتباعده للتنجم والمنتجم والمنتجر المحمد المحج المحتك

On the tax side, fiscal experts already are contemplating measures to ensure pet proposals have more than 100 beneficiaries. That is because the line-item veto law only grants the president authority to eliminate tax provisions after theyhave been certified by Congress's Joint Committee on Taxation as benefiting fewer than 100 people or firms in a single year.

Analysts Monday suggested a number of strategies for getting off the Joint Committee's hit list, including:

 Structuring corporate tax breaks so they benefit shareholders rather than firms. Clinton aides had targeted a tax break benefiting Amway Corp., but because the provision was tied to dividends it did not make the veto list.

· Pairing large tax breaks for a handful of beneficiaries with similar small breaks spread among a large number of beneficiaries.

Clumping tax breaks in broad, catchall categories wherever possible to expand the number of beneficiaries

Consider a provision vetoed by Clinton that would have granted a $317 million tax break to banks, securities firms and insurers doing business overseas. More than 100

Young and a former Senate financial institutions would benefit from that provision. But because some of the firms use different accounting periods than others, most would claim the break immediately while a handful of stragglers would not do so until 1999.

Grafmeyer argues that the firms could have stayed off the veto list had they made sure everyone claimed their benefit in the same fiscal year.

lodeed, he contends that as many as three-quarters of the 79 provisions singled out by congressional tax analysts as subject to the line-item veto, could have kept off the veto list with similarly modest technical adjustments.

On the spending side, legislative analysts expect lawmakers to seek protection for pet spending proposals by grouping them with ini-tiatives favored by the president. That is because the line-item veto gives the president power to strike an entire spending item from a bill but does oot give him authority to reduce the expenditure of that item by a specific amount.

A congressman seeking money for new roads or bridges in his district might wedge it in an environmental spending bill favored by the White House - without identifying a specific dollar amount for the project.

California governor OK's welfare reform

By VIRGINIA ELLIS

SACRAMENTO (Los Angeles Times) – After months of parti-san warfare and weeks of hardnosed hargainiog. Governor Pete Wilson signed into law a historie reform package Monday transforming welfare in California into a program that provides only temporary aid to the poor and requires work in return for assistance.

With legislative leaders standing at his elbow, the Republican governor formally set into motion revolutionary changes in the welfare law that will affect 2.3 million people, mostly women and children wbo depend oo government assistance for the basic necessities of life. "This was not an easy task, but in the end the effort produced a solution based on very sonnd and very equitable principles," Wilson said. "From oow on, public assistance io California will be temporary, it io will be a transition, it will he strictly time-limited," he said. The oew program, oamed CalWORKS and slated to go into effect Janoary 1, will limit to 24 mooths the time enreot recipients can be oo aid. It also will provide community service positions for those who reach that limit and cannot find work, require recipients to participate in job searches and joh training and peoalize those wbo refuse to accept a valid job offer. Mirroring a federal welfare reform act passed a year ago, the program sets a five-year lifetime limit for adults to receive aid, but at the same time it obligates the state to make massive investments in job training and child care to case their movement into the work force.

In the first year, state officials estimate $1.3 hillion will be spent oo child care and $530 millioo oo employment.

Because of the investments in child care and training, the $7 hillioo-plos welfare program initially will oot prodoce savings, And, in the first year, the Legislative Analyst estimates welfare spending will increase by $223 million.

But the program - designed to comply with the new federal law - is expected to significantly redoce welfare rolls in the uext five years and result in cost reductions.

Legislative leaders, many of whom only a week ago were exchanging barbs with the goyernor, praised the reform package as an example of compromise at its best.

Clinton and Blair: A trans-Atlantic love affair

By AUDREY GILLAN

WASHINGTON (Washington Post) - British Ambassador Sir John Kerr jokingly told a recent lunchcon that he was returning to his homeland because there was nothing left for him to do in Washington. President Clinton and the British prime minister, Tony Blair, are getting on so well. he said, that the opportunity for diplomats to heal any political rifts seems to have gone.

The so-called special relationship between the United States and the United Kingdom has become something of a 'new special relaconship" in the months since the May 1 election of the New Labor government in Britain, Whenever the two leaders meet, the ambassador said, they can be seen huddled in a corner shooting the breeze like old friends. Conversation can range from welfare policy and education to guitar riffs and how to raise a child out of the public eye.

The closeness of the new special relationship was to be reaffirmed next month when Blair was to make his first official visit to Washington. But the two leaders cannot find a date that suits them.

Clinton wants to help daughter Chelsea settle in at Stanford University and Blair has both political and family commitments.

A British Embassy spokesman said there is no "lack of desire for the visit. It purely is a diary prob-lem." Marsha Berry, a spokes-woman for Hillary Rodham Clinton, agreed: "It's a scheduling problem and nothing else." The ease with which the two lead-observed as chilly cordiality between Clinton and former British prime minister John Major. Some put this down to the Conservative party having parachuted help into the Republicans' 1992 presidential campaign, especially after the alle-gation that Major's government investigated whether Clinton tried to avoid the draft by becoming a British citizen in 1968 when he was ers get on contrasts with what many a Rhodes scholar at Oxford. Clinton and Major eventually developed a working relationship but it could not have been described as warm. The bonding between Clinton and Blair marks a success for what has been termed the "Blair mafia," movers and shakers who have worked on Blair's image in the US. "We think Blair's image is very Clearly important here. the Americans regard him as a leading European politician," said Chris Jones, secretary of the Labor party hranch for British citizens living in the United States.

"For many, Britain is America's window on Europe. If you can culti-vate the special relationship and bring Tony Blair into the spotlight I think we are doing our job."

Washington, for Blair, is crucial. Britain invests more in the United States than in any other country: conversely, Americans are the higgest foreign investors in Britain. Accordingly, the Labor leader has had many supporters working in the capital and in New York to promote him as a powerful politician, one who is able to ensure economic stability and growth and reassure American investors that Britain is good business and is in good hands. Blair has worked to overcome the suspicion with which Labor leaders have been regarded here. After a struggle, Blair abolished the historic Labor tract that committed the party to the nationalization of British industry and began to talk of New Labor as the party of business.

The importance of Washington was emphasized by the recent announcement by the British govemment that the new British ambassador would be Christopher Meyer, John Major's former press secretary and currently British envoy in Bonn. The appointment was seen in Bonn as a clear indication Britain gives political priority to America over Germany. Meyer, said to be "highly thought of" by Blair, was the prime minister's personal choice.

Uotil 1992 there was a degree of antipathy toward the United States within the Labor party, said Keith Tan-Whelan, chairman of the US branch of the party. But that began to change with the election of Clinton in 1992.

The pro-Blair PR machine has swung swiftly into operation and Blair and his wife Cherie, a lawyer, have been presented to the American public as a good-looking couple who have no sordid skeletons in their closet. At a recent party in New York hosted by Harold Evans, the British president of publisher Random House, and his wife Tina Brown, editor of the New Yorker, the Blairs mingled with celebrities such as Martin Scorsese, Henry Kissinger, Lauren Bacall and Barbara Wahers. The British people who attended were dubbed "cocktail socialists" by the British press.

Some in the Blair mafia dismiss such parties as inconsequential events that mask the serious work being done on Labor's behalf. Since Clinton's 1992 campaign the bond between Democratic advisers and Labor party insiders has continued to solidify. Jonathan Powell, Blair's chief of staff, was a catalyst for the changing relationship when he worked here at the British Embassy as first secretary during Clinton's first presidential campaign. Powell established relationships with key Clinton aides, many of whom have tuned into the New Labor message. # An unholy alliance

Shavuot, an altercation marred the beginning of Tisba Be'av, the day of mourning marking the destruction of the First and Second temples and other calamities that have befallen the Jewish people.

On Shavuot, police found it necessary to evacuate Conservative and Reform worshipers who were vilified and attacked by some haredim at the Western Wall. This time, however, the police, far from defending the the worshipers attempting to pray in a far corner of the Western Wall plaza, forcibly evicted them outside the Old City wall after about 10 minutes of their prayer service.

The police claim that they were merely enforcing a regulation that prohibits activities which contradict the "local practice" at a holy site, and which may offend others who pray there. This regulation was put into place a few years ago to prevent women from praying in the women's section at the Wall while wearing a talit. The Supreme Court subsequently upbeld this prohibition by the religious authorities and the "local practice" regulation itself.

For years, bowever, the Conservative and Reform movements have quietly beld services, unobtrusively, on the edges of the Western Wall plaza. The Conservative service on the eve of Tisha Be'av, therefore, was arguably part of the "local practice," not a violation of it. It was only after the Conservative Movement notified the authorities of its intention to hold a service at the Wall plaza - thinking that the police would protect them - that the police seem to have discov-ered their questionable interpretation of the law.

In effect, the police have entered into an upholy alliance with the religious authorities. The authorities have taken a legitimate concept and regulation - adopted to prevent activities that directly interfere with prayer by the majority of worshipers - and interpreted it so broadly as to prevent any prayer of men and women together, even if it is far away from the Wall itself,

It is true that the Orthodox prohibition on lisrently enjoy. tening to a woman singing would make it difficult to create a third, egalitarian, section adjacent to the Wall, next to the existing men's and women's sections. But that is not what is being sought here. What the Conservative and Reform

n Monday night, as during this past movements are trying to do is pray according to their customs - at the Wall, but out of the earshot, and even the sight of, those praying at the Wall itself.

The religious authorities and the police point to the fact that the "local practice" regulation applies to the entire boly place, which is defined as the entire plaza. But Orthodox practice does not really apply to the whole plaza, which except for the area adjacent to the Wall is routinely populated with mixed groups of tourists and others. who are not expected to behave and dress as if they were inside an Orthodox synagogue. There is no reason why a group of mixed worshipers should not be allowed to pray a substantial distance from where the Orthodox are praying.

Jerusalem police chief Cmdr. Yair Yitzhaki, when explaining the behavior of police on Channel 1, not only made no apologies, but accused the Conservative group of deliberately "flexing its muscles."

But even if the police explanation that they were applying the law is accepted, this cannot explain the degree of force that was used, nor the fact that the group was pushed outside the Old City wall, way beyond the limits of the plaza covered by the regulation.

The fact that it is easier for the police to manhandle a small group of Conservative Jews than it is to defend them from small groups of haredi ruffians does not excuse blaming the victim. Neither is name calling, such as Internal Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani calling the agreed-beforehand service a "provocation," an acceptable response.

Though the Conservative group has a strong case, they, too, must be careful not to cross the fine line between exercising their legitimate rights and unnecessarily impinging on the religious practice of others. But the Orthodox authorities must understand that heavy-handed use of the political, legal - and now police levers at their disposal amounts to an abuse of power, which is not only wrong, but will ultimately threaten the monopoly status, they cur-

For if anyone was muscle flexing, it was the police, who evidently decided it would be easier to teach the Conservatives a lesson than it would be to apply the law with some humanity and defend

We sat in a comer of the lobby of the King David Hotel, some time before the Mahaneh Yebuda bombing, State Madeleine Albright will discussing the sad situation of the bring to Jerusalem if she comes at peace process. bush. Her recent visit to the Balkans, where she berated the Croats and the Serbs in the strongest possible undiplomatic language, is a case in point. Both she and President Clinton have clearly and unequivocally stated their objection to Har Homa and to our settlement policy.

We do not, of course, want to have the Americans dictate to us what our policies should be. But neither do we want to get into a collision course with an administration that has been more friendly to us than any previous American government. Nor do we want to see our hopes from the peace process and allowed us to stew in our own juice has come to an end. "The time for some hard decisions has come," she declared, leaving unstated what would be the outcome if those "hard decisions" were not forthcoming. On her agenda are subjects that will, indeed, need decisions that will be hard and painful - negotiations for the final settlement, further withdrawals, our settlement policy, Har Homa.

How refreshing it would be if we were to pre-empt Albright, and come with some ideas of our own, of the sort proposed by the Palestinian member of the Copenhagen Alliance. We should not wait to have our arm twisted by that formidable lady from the State Department. There is still time for the prime minister and his team of advisors to surprise us all with some constructive thinking. But it is for the Palestinians to make the first move. The Americans have made it plain that they will not condone any halfmeasures on the part of the Palestinians in the fight against violence and terrorism. Nor will we, and rightfully so.

As Albright's visit draws nearer, both Palestinians and Israelis will have to decide whether they wish to risk a complete breakdown of the negotiations, with all that such a development would mean, or to make the hard decisions that the secretary of state has demanded, and which the large majority of both Israelis and Palestinians would like to see.

The will of the two peoples is to see the peace process put back on track. The visit of Albright may be the last chance for this to happen. It is a chance that must not be missed.

t was the wrong place, at the wrong time, and perhaps the Lwrong issue. It was indeed a provocation. But the principle was absolutely correct.

Equality is a right, not a privilege; and should be extended to all. And such a national symbol - not just a religious symbol - as the Wall should be open to all; individually and collectively. No one has the right to claim it for himself. Despite the promises that they would be allowed to pray quietly in an integrated fashion, those non-Orthodox Jews who tried to hold a prayer service on Tisha Be'av must have known that such a demonstration would provoke a hostile reaction. After all, Erev Tisha Bc'av attracts the most worshipers, almost all haredim, of any other religious event on the Jewish calendar.

The purpose of the Conservative minyan was not solely to pray, but also to make a civil rights point. Sadly, the point that was made was not one relating to the essence of religious freedom in a democratic state, but rather the continual use of excessive force by the police in dispersing demonstrations in this country. Unwittingly, these few Conservative Jews showed the world that police brutality is alive and well in Israel.

Spuned on by an aggressive, abu-sive haredi crowd, the police did its bidding. Common sense and decency would have dictated the police to simply surround the minyan, and let them finish their prayers.

Internal Security Minister Avigdor Kahalani should have taken his police force to task for their excessive behavior rather than point a finger at the Conservative Jews praying there. He certainly did that when he castigated his police for using excessive force when clearing haredi demonstrators from hlocking Rehov Bar Ilan in Jerusalem.

Should integrating the Wall become the focal point of the struggie for recognition for non-Orthodox religious Jews?

At the same time, with heightened the recent bombing in Mahaneh Yehuda, it is the beight of chutzpa to pick Erev Tisha Be'av, when the Western Wall Plaza would be packed, to hold a demonstration.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

LET US SOLVE OUR DISPUTES

Sir, - I was at the Wall - I stood between the insistence of the Conservative Movement to change Jewish tradition and the passion of the baredim to resist that change.

The decision to run a provocative mixed prayer service at the Western Wall plaza with thousands of haredim present and the anticipated violent response were both wrong. Before, during, and after I was thinking, "It's all so predictable. There must be another way."

I am pained by violence and took part in a campaign by the Orthodox world to avert a clash. I, together with other haredim at the Kotel, were desperately trying to prevent confrontation and, dare I say, the spilling of blood between Jew and Jew.

We distributed flyers asking Conservative Jews to join in the regular and time-honored mode of praying at the Kotel, with the headline "Let's pray together." We

OUR VALUE SYSTEM

Sir, - We are subjected to a revisionist Zionist history and now to add to the celebration of a century of Zionism, we are told that we should change our value system (Amy Klein's op-ed, "Glad it's Gefen," July 28).

I am not a moven of rock, but I suppose that the hysteria connected with it (not the music) is similar to that witnessed at the Paramount when Frank Sinatra sang in New York. As a lifelong Zionist, I abhor Aviv Gefen's message of "not only staying out of the army but leaving the country." To compare this to the anti-Vietnam movement is fuzzyminded reasoning. The IDF serves also distributed to the haredim the Eda Haredit announcement that violence is wrong and the way to solve conflicts is through verbal exchange. This statement was posted all over the Western Wall plaza and the adjoining Jewish Quarter. Furthermore, in the US, major groups like Agudat Yisrael called upon the Conservative Movement not to push their cause in a provocative manner. Yes, there is a significant dispute. The Orthodox maintain that mixed prayers are not God's will and that segregated prayer has been accepted since the time of the Mishna. The Conservatives are spearheading a move for change that would enable men and women to pray together at the Wall and challenge the status quo. Disputes are legitimate, but it is a grave mistake to think that provocative acts will force a solution. History has proven otherwise. The date the Conservative Movement chose to make its Jerusalem.

60 years ago: On August 13, 1937, The Palestine Post reported that the "Strong Man of Iraq," Chief of Iraqi General Staff, Bekr Sidky Pasha Al-Askari was shot dead by a soldier at the Mosul landing ground. The Iraqi air force commander lost his life while trying to save the general.

We will only see an end to this deadlock of Jew hating Jew by peacemaking in the spirit of the Eda Haredit flyer: "Our strength is in the power of words. Any form of violence is contrary to our spiritual goals and will eventually lead to the opposite of our good intentions." Let us solve our disputes in the fashion proposed by our heritage: by sitting down together as brothers and listening to one another. "The ways of Torah are ways of pleasantness." these rhetorically threatened (and often "competitively-challenged" i.e. monopolistic) vested interests, because they know that the more noise they make the less likely the (already slim) chance that the reform aimed against them will be carried through.

In any case, this government is hamstrung in its ability to do any-thing, let alone carry through complex and contentious reforms. However, there is something important and useful that it could do, if only it wanted to.

The job of chairman of the Securities Authority has fallen September and October, and is enshrined in formal protocols in which a long series of paragraphs vacant, with the appointment of Arich Mintkevitch as chairman of Israel Discount Bank. The top job requires an indepen-dent, intelligent and determined person who will play sheriff in the Wild West annosphere of the Tel Aviv Stock Exchange.

The leading candidate for the job is the current Supervisor of Banks at the Bank of Israel, Ze'ev Abeles - and he is indeed suited for the job. Certainly, Abeles is infinitely preferable to any political appointee that Netanyahn and his aides may come up with.

However, the opportunity of appointing a new head to the Securities Authority should be seen in a much wider context. The overall regulation of the Israeli capital market is a mess. This is widely recognized, and Mintkevitch himself proposed a reform several years ago, under which the various regulatory anthorities - the Securities Authority, which covers the issuance and trading of securities, the Snpervisor of Banks, who deals with all aspects of banking activity, and the Supervisor of Insurance and Capital Markets Commissioner at the Treasury (a hybrid function in an understaffed and under-qualified department with a poor track record) - would be combined.

This could be done either by close cooperation between different bodies, or by the creation of an overall regulatory entity, along the lines of the one the British have decided to establish.

What could easily be done is to give Abeles the chairmanship of the Securities Anthority, with a mandate to combine it with his current fieldom of the bank supervisory department. This would be detached from the Bank of Israel and merged into the new superentity, as would the relevant Treasury units for the insurance, pension and savings sectors.

Of course, in this reform, the Treasury would be the vested interest whose turf would be invaded and vandalized, so you can guess where the main opposition to any such structural reform in the capital market would come from.

POSTSCRIPT

ON A RECENT Alitalia flight, Yohanan Goldman of Tel Aviv was browsing the in-flight magazine.

He came across an ad for cabin attendants, which included a ques-tion that really got him wondering: "Can you swim?"

Goldman adds: "In all fairness, I think passengers should also be asked this question before they are issued a ticket."

SHOULD integrating the Wall become the focal point of the struggle for recognition for non-Orthodox religious Jews? It is iron-ic that while Conservative Jews were being denied the right to pray in a mixed minyan at the Wall on Erev Tisha Be'av, Tel Aviv was declared an open city that night, and Prime Minister Netanyahu was signing a registration document for a Reform women to be part of a religious council.

So the battle for non-Orthodox recognition might be better played out elsewhere. I would hate to see us Reform and Conservative Jews turn the Wall into the same blinded passionate fusion of religion and nationalism that has been the case with our Orthodox counterparts.

Auvone who wants to pray at the Wall should be allowed to do so. Guidelines for the type of worship there should be set out. But as central as the Wall is historically, religiously and spiritually, it should not be the center of the struggle for equal rights of non-Orthodox religious Jews. The struggle should not take place in the courts either, it should take place in the public sector.

Our major energies should be in continuing to build our schools, widening the enrollment in our yeshivas, strengthening our youth movements and settlements, bringing more Conservative and Reform Jews on aliya (and telling our diaspora constituents to give our movements here the same type of money that Habad abroad gives to its institutions and rabbis here). reaching ont to Russian Jews, fighting for human rights, not only for us, but for other minorities who are more oppressed than are we -Beduin, Israeli Arabs, Druse, Ethiopians and Palestinians. These activities are not as dramatic as being shoved to the ground at the Wall; hut in the end they will be far more effective in shaping Israeli society. And eventually they will bring non-Orthodox religious Jews not just recognition, but influence in a country that desperately needs an open and enlightened approach to religious expression.

Tong attle Japanese ask: What ever happened to good manners happened to good manners?

A scene of the past? Many language conservatives believe the breakdown in the use of polite

By ERIC TALMADGE

The venerable art of talking politely - a conserve of the Japanese language has never been easy to master. But for many Japanese these days, it's proving downright impossible.

Young people frequently fumble their rare attempts at "keigo," the complex language of respect, and salespeople deliherately misuse Japanese honorifics merely to hutter up customers.

The situation has gotten so bad that some educators even wonder whether Japan would be better off dropping elaborate formali-

Concerned about the hreakdown in polite Jspanese, a panel of 15 experts has begun studying the problem for the government and is to report back to the prime minister by the fall. Optimists they are not.

The use of polite language is a mess," said committee member Shinji Shinoda, a Tokyo junior bigh school principal.

"We often bave to start from the absolute basics," said Noriko Toyama, a public speaking instructor at a small language school in Tokyo. "It is really surprising how little some people know

Talking nicely in Japanese means far more than remembering to say "please" and "thank vou." Perfected over centuries of feudal rule, when class distinctions were a central fact of life, the language of respect is divided into three subtly different categories: Two stress respect for the person being spoken to, while the other emphasizes the bumility of the persoo doing the speaking.

Other forms of speech are used when talking to equals or those in a lower social station, such as children or subordinates at work.

WHAT THIS all means is that the Japanese must choose their vocabulary carefully to fit every social situation. For most Japanese, the decisions come naturally, even on some rather obscure matters.

In one recent government survey, for example, roughly half of 2.200 people queried said they generally - and quite properly -add honorifics to such words as lunch or tea, creating the more socially benign "hooorable lunch." or "honorable tea." Hardly anyone, however, osed booorifics with beer or steak sauce. That would be overdoing

But the same survey, conducted by the government's Agency for Cultural Affairs, found many of the finer points of the language of respect are taking a serious beating.

Among other things, it found little resistance to a trend among salespeople to use excessively polite forms of speech to secure a sale, which may be good husiness hut is a definite linguistic no-no.

Younger people, meanwhile, are far less likely to use formal language at all, and tend to use it incorrectly when they do.

"Children are not getting the kind of exposure to polite speech that they did before World War II," said principal Shinoda. "They don't oeed to use it as much with their parents or teach-Crs.

Shinoda said the weakening of polite Japanese in day-to-day discourse is not necessarily all bad. It could be taken as a sign that society is becoming more democratic, he said, and that the class consciousness of old is losing its grip. Several years ago, in fact, major oewspapers even toned down what bad been the epitome of polite Japanese - a variety osed only when referring to the royal family.

But many language conservatives believe the breakdown in the use of polite Japanese also reflects a more general abandonment of traditional values, such as respect for one's elders and the willingness to accept one's place in society.

"Of course democracy is a good thing," noted instructor Toyama, "Bot social realities still exist. Polite talk is a way of seeking harmony with that. It's an attitude more than just a vocabulary.'

Toyama also stressed that while polite Japanese is weakening in many quarters, speaking it is still de rigueur in some of the most crucial situations.

If two roughly equal candidates for the same job are interviewed, the one who can speak properly is probably going to get hired," she said. "It's just so central to us. I don't think we could ever really do without it."

etractors of Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahu will be happy to know that there are promises which he does keep especially to children. Sooo after he came into office, "Bibi promised a computer for every child in Israel, and I want to announce that he's keepiog his promise," declared Ramle Mayor Yoel Lavie at an emotional ceremony at the Ramle cultural center, where 210 youngsters from economically deprived backgrounds were presected with computers.

The five-year project initiated by Netanyahu who, together with his wife, Sara, was also oo hand, calls for the distributioo of 30,000 computers to low-iocome families includiog those io the Arab sector. Also present at the ceremony were business tycoon Yuli Ofer, who heads the project, and Motorola CEO Hanan Achsef, who is its chairman.

SURPRISE! Sorprise. Since there's oothing auspicions abont a 39th hirthday, Absorption Minister Yuli Edelstein didn't have an inkling last week that the staffers in his ministry had gone into cahoots with his wife, Tania, to give him a surprise party. Next year, wheo he turns 40, he'll have every right to expect one. Other public figures celebrating their birthdays this month inclode Shimon Peres on August 16 and Reuma Weizman on August 18.

O.J. Simpson earned more than he did. Another cootroversial figure whom Sheftel, an ardent Yiddishist, adored was Meyer Lansky. Why? Because Lansky's favorite bedtime readiog was Shalom Aleichem – in Yiddish!

BEING a godfather to only one child is daunting enough, but Rabbi David Ifergan, the legendary miracle worker from Netivot, together with Rahhi Issachar Cohen, head of the Negev Yeshiva, did the honors three times over at Gan Oranim for triplets Matan, Kfir and Sahar Slonimski, the sons of Tamar and Gonen Slonimski of Ramat Gan. When the theo-childless Slonimskis visited Ifergan in Netivot nine mooths ago, the rahhi asked the woold-be mother how many children she wanted. "One will do for now," she replied. "But how many do you want altogether?" he persisted, "Three? Four?" When she settled for three, he rapped on the table three times and sent her home, with the promise that he would be the godfather. Thirty-nine weeks later, Tamar Slonimski gave hirth to triplets.

Year of the greenback

A remarkably strong dollar swamps Europe with Americans, boosting local economies

By ANNE SWARDSON

R

PARIS (The Washington Post) -Graham Allen tooks great in the leather cowboy hat he is trying on in a boutique in an underground mall near the Louvre, and the price - $54 including tax - seems so reasonable, be says, he just might buy it.

The 23-year-old American student, fresh from eight months in Spain, has seen his dollars go further and further during his time in Europe.

The value of the dollar against major European currencies bas soared more than 20 percent since the new year, much of the increase in the last two months. "We weren't going to go to London, but now we are," said Allen's traveling companion and fellow student, Tyler Downey, 23.

Paris is expensive, but not as expensive as we expected. I know I'm charging more on my credit card than I normally do," Downey added.

The greenback is worth more in French francs and German marks than at any time since October 1989. That's good for American tourists overseas, whose costs are becoming cheaper by the day.

But experts say the most beneficial effect of the dollar's rise may be for businesses on this side of the Atlantic. It's not just tourists buying hats, though that helps. Because weaker French francs and German marks mean exports from those countries become cheaper in dollars and thus sell more, the strong dollar is giving a badly economies - just when they need it. Saddled with high unemployment and discouraged consumers, France and Germany, the economic bulwarks of continental Europe, have been in the doldrums for years. Slow economies have led to political restlessness and stalcmate in both nations.

If a strong dollar stimulates more growth and thus lowers unemployment, it could buy time for leaders in both nations. Growth could offer leeway to enact badly needed economic reforms and deregulation. And it might make it easier for those countries to qualify for the European Union's shaky-butongoing plan to convert to a single currency by Jan. 1, 1999. "I think the fall of the European currencies against the dollar is a good thing," said Herve Goulletquier, chief Paris economist for the French bank Credit Lyonnais. "For a long time, we have been blocked, we have lacked economic growth. If we have more growth, people will be more willing to accept the reforms that are needed. It is a kind of virtuous circle."

The rising dollar comes as the nations in the European Union are cutting government spending, raising taxes and otherwise tightening their belts to reduce their budget deficits to 3% of gross domestic product this year. That is the key target for those wishing to participate in the curo. The outlook for the euro has been clouding lately. The arrival of needed kick to ailing European bas worsened France's already slim chances of getting its deficit down to the target by the deadline. And German Chancellor Helmut Kohl, who insists the deficit target must be met precisely, is facing political difficulties that reduce his budgetary maneuvering room. But higher economic growth rates make it possible to have less severe spending reductions and still get close to the 3% target. Because the economies of France and Germany are so dependent on exports, which represent one-fourth and one-third of economic activity in those countries, respectively, exchange rates have an enormous effect. In Germany, exports are expected to be at least 6% higher this year than last year, though exchange rates are not the only reason. Economic growth provides "a more amenable backdrop" to budget austerity, said Martin Brooks, an international economist with Goldman, Sachs investment firm in London. Ironically, the high dollar arises in part from investor concern about the future of the euro. Abont a year ago, financial mar-kets believed the euro countries would be a small group, all of which more or less met the standards for fiscal rectitude and economic austerity. But since then, Italy and Spain, among others, have pressed hard to join. Both have made huge strides in cutting their budget deficits, especially Spain. But both are viewed by Germany as "soft" councould not be relied on to keep theireconomic houses in order. In addition, France's new Prime Minister Lionel Jospin, while promising to meet France's commitments, is opposed to austerity. German officials worry because a single currency, in a sense, tars all participants with the same brush. If Italy or France is fiscally irresponsible, fewer international investors would want to invest in the euro, even if the Germans keep their deficit down. Less investment means a weaker currency.

Germany, more concerned than most nations about inflation, dislikes a weak euro because it would add to inflation by making the price of imported goods more expensive. Those who think the future euro will indeed be weak are now selling German marks and buying American dollars, thus making the dollar stronger. The dollar has gone up when it looks like the euro will be weak or when there is broad confusion about its future," said Steven Englander of the firm Smith Barney in Paris. "Now we have both." The French Finance Ministry has made no official comment on the rise of the dollar, often if officials feel the dollar has moved too high they will try to talk it down with public statements. If France is satisfied with a weaker franc, it indicates a change of thinking. When former president Valery Giscard d'Estaing said last fall that the franc was overvalued at about 5 to the dollar and should fall to government officials. Today the dollar is worth about 6.4 francs. In Germany, a government spokesman said this week that no need was seen to intervene in financial markets to arrest the dollar's rise. Finance Minister Theo Waigel expressed some concein last month; but analysts do not believe the powerful central bank, the Bundesbank, will act soon to rein in the dollar. "Normally we would have expected that beyond 1.75 marks to the dollar, the government would say this is a harmful development..... This time that didn't happen," even though the mark is approaching 1.9 to the dollar, said Martin Huefner. chief economist for Bayerische Vereinsbank in Munich. With inflation in check, he said, "possibly this is the best of all worlds for the European economies." Meanwhile, American tourists can just enjoy it. When Clark and Judy Willett of St. Louis booked their Paris botel room last April. the nightly price of 600 francs was about $104. Now that they are here, they are paying $93.75. The Willetts, budgeted carefully for this trip. Now, they have little doubt they will be able to stay within their guidelines.

"Last night our dinner was just $30," said Judy Willett. "Going up the Eiffel Tower was 57 francs ($8.90); that's not expensive."

When told the dollar had risen since they had last checked exchange rates, she brightened. "Gee, I guess we'll have to spend more," she said.

In Canada

TORONTO (The Washington Post) - In the taxonomy of global terrorism, Canada might seem like a marginal player, a middle power with no symbolic value as a target, no colonial past to inspire vengeance and few controversial entanglements in the world. But on the streets of Toronto, an estimated several thousand members of the Tamil Tiger rebel group have taken temporary refuge from their rebellion against Sri Lanka, using Canada as a base to re-fund and regroup. In some neighbor-hoods, rival gangs, not directly linked to the Tigers but vicious nonetheless, have dueled in gun batties for local tarf. In British Columbia, militant Sikhs press their cause for a separate state in India through local clashes with more moderate members of the religion and the 1985 bombing of an Air India jet bound from Canada to Asia.

Canadian security officials believe the radical Shiite Moslem group Hizbullah bas an "infrastructure" in Canada to barbor terrorists and possibly plan attacks. Since the 1960s, Jewish and other groups have monitored, and complained about, the relatively comfortable lives Nazi war criminals, convicted Palestinian terrorists and others have had in some of Canada's most innocuous, middle-class neighborhoods. Canada in modern times has offered shelter to tens of thousands of refugees seeking protec-tion under United Nations conventions, encouraging the immigration of skilled workers and investors, and transforming its cities into a polyglot mosaic. But Canada also has imported the political struggles of those refugee and immigrant groups.

"We need to wise up in more general terms about the growing nature of the threat," said Dave Harris, president of Insignis Strategic Research and the former director of strategic planning for the Canadian Security Intelligence Service (CSIS), Canada's spy agency.

"It all adds up to expanding networks, and it is the network nature of what is going on that is alarm-ing," Harris said, citing expatriate groups such as the Tamil Tigers trying to support a rebellion from abroad and organizations such as Hizbullah that see Canada as a gateway. "You have organized channels and movement and infrastructure. we are s and a roommate planned a bomb attack on the New York subway. Abu Mezer had been living in Canada since 1993, when he won refugee status by arguing that, as a Palestinian, he bad been persecuted in Israel, according to the US Immigration and Naturalization Service (INS). He was arrested in Washington state after his third attempt to enter the US illegally across the lightly guarded border. Released on bond, he was in the midst of deportation proceedings when police descended on his Brooklyn apartment.

Back bome, Abu Mezer had done little more than throw rocks along with other youths during the Palestinian uprising known as the intifada - bardly the mark of a suicide bomber and little reason for Canadian immigration offi-cials to consider him a security threat.

Likewise, the INS gave him the due-process rights expected in a democratic country; he was freed on bond when there was no apparent evidence of the violent, anti-US sentiment subsequently found in pamphlets strewed around Abu Mezer's apartment.

"We live in a democratic society where we have chosen to have freedom of movement," Canadian immigration spokesman Benoit Chiquette. "With the buge movement of people, it would be impossible to assure that we would never allow (in) someone inadmissible."

Canadian law enforcement officials know all too well the repercussions of a mistake. In 1985, Air India Flight 182 exploded off the coast of Ireland, en route from Toronto to India. The explosion killed all 329 people aboard, most of them Canadians. The chief suspects were members of a Sikh separatist group based in Britisb Columbia. A central suspect was killed in a gun battle with Indian police several years ago, but Royal Canadian Mounted Police investigators are still trying to develop evidence on others. Recently, the Mounted Police discovered a man it employed to translate documents, Kumaravelu Vignarajah, was a commander of the Liberation Tigers of Tamil Eclam, a paramilitary group Canada considers a "terrorist organization." He was also, apparently, a spy for the Sri memgence service Vignarajah, one of an estimated several thousand possible Tiger guerrillas in the Toronto area, had been given refugee status in 1989. In such cases, CSIS and other Canadian officials note, the country is swift to move and has shown its willingness to deport people considered to pose a terrorist threat. More ambiguous, say such activists as Canadian Jewish Congress Director Bernie Farber, has been the response to people who have done wrong abroad but seem to present little danger to Canada. The country bas only begun investigating a handful of cases, despite the likely presence in Canada of at least several . dozen, and perhaps several bundred, former Nazis, including some who fled from the US as a result of investigations there. Others also have been able to stay in Canada far too long, Farber contends. Mahmoud Mohammad Issa Mohammad was convicted in Greece in the late 1960s for the bombing of an El Al plane. Released from a Greek prison in a hostage exchange, he eventually was allowed to immigrate to Canada. A political uproar ensued, and Canadian officials decided to move to deport him. That was 10 years ago. His case is still in the courts. Unless they can bring past criminals who abuse our immigration system to justice," Farber said, "today's criminals will look to Canada.

Gathering intelligence on groups such as the Tigers or Hizbullah, or on individuals who might pose a security threat in Canada, fails primarily to CSIS. The agency says little publicly about its work, only that it coordinates closely with Immigration Canada. Harris points ont, bowever, that the agency's staffing has fallen to 2,200 from an estimated 2,700 at a time when its mission bas become more sophisticated.

Twice in the past few months, individuals from the Middle East surfaced in Canada who subsequently were linked to actual or planned bomb attacks aimed at Americans.

Hani Abdel Rahim Sayegh was deported to the United States from Ottawa to face charges associated with the bombing of an apartment building in Saudi Arabia a year ago that killed 19 American military personnel. He was seeking refugee status here but was arrested after US and Saudi officials told Canadians about his possible involvement in the bombing and his membership in Hizballah. He offered no counter-argument at his deportation hearing. In their case against him, Canadian officials contended Hizbullah had an active organization in Canada.

The fair starts today and runs through Angust 24 at the capital's Mitchell Garden, Sultan's Pool and the Khutsot Hayotser Arts and Crafts Center.

Mayor Ehud Olmert says he hopes ticket sales will surpass last year's 60,000 by at least 20,000. They might well do so, since this year's fair boasts new and exciting features. Not only are there more international crafts on display, there are also works of 150 local artists and artisans, including prints, silk screening, ceramics, metalwork, jewelry, weaving, textiles, Judaica, toys, applied arts, leather and carpentry. Other features include international cuisine at an array of food stores and a pub.

New on the agenda are guided night tours of the city: one includes the ramparts and gates of the Old City and Mount Zion; another tour encompasses the most exciting archeological finds from the Second Temple period through today.

Toe-tappers will enjoy nightly complimentary concerts (9:00) on the fair grounds. Tonight's concert features the Bustan Avraham band with its original blend of East/West music. Composer/lyricist Ronit dren (six to 13), NIS 20.

Next year, fair director Sara Malka aims to celebrate Israel's 50th anniversary by hosting 50 countries. She hopes by then the fair will be big enough to fill the entire area up to the Cinematheque.

Jerusalem's police chief, Cmdr. Yair Yitzhaki, says security measures will reflect current national precautionary standards.

The fair will be open every evening (except Fridays) from 6 to 11:30, and on Saturday evenings from the end of Sbabbat until midnight. At the northern entrance to the fair, the permanent artists of Khutsot Hayotser Arts and Crafts Center will display their works. The public can visit, browse and see them in action from Sunday through Thursday, 10 a.m. to 5 p.m., and on Friday until 2 p.m.

Esta: Israeli rock 'n' roll in New York

By BLASNE HARDEN

Tobody wants to hear Israeli rock-and-roll. It is ridiculous." So says Shlomo Deshet, an Israeli drummer who has joined three of his countrymen in cooking up a wildly original sound that is to formulaic rock 'n' roll what homemade borsch1 is to Campbell's chicken noodle soup. The band, called Esta, blends pensive jazz with unruly Balkan folk. It melds country-western with "stuff we stole from the Hassidim." It fuses the Turkish banjo with the Scottish bagpipe, and somehow makes it all musically whole. At its core, Esta's music has a raucous, foot-stomping energy that's driven by Deshet, who is a formidable rock drummer.

"People like to categorize music. But we don't want to be obligated to any forms or any traditions," says Deshel who, with his fellow band members, admits to being an equal-opportunity thief, stealing from every musical tradition he has ever heard --if it suits the integrity of an Esta composition.

The band, which is planning another American tour in September, has been polishing its sound for the better part of 15 years.

Two of the band members -Deshet and guitarist Ori Binshtok - began playing together when they were schoolboys in Tel Aviv. They met the two other members of the band when they all were doing military service.

It was during long practice sessions in a bomb shelter in Tel Aviv in the 1980s that the band developed its distinctive sound. "We played literally underground for seven years. When it is peacetime in Israel, the city gives the bomb shelters to artists," says Deshet.

When they were above ground, the musicians often worked separately as accompanists to some of Israel's best folk and popular singers. Their period of apprenticeship ended in 1991, when they cast their professional lot together and moved to Greenwich Village.

"We had to come to New York and make our band a matter of life or death. If it was not going to be Esta, it was going to be nothing." Deshet says. After six , years in New York, when it was clear that they had succeeded in becoming more than nothing, traditions. they moved back to Israel last spring. They are now prepared to performance this spring, before a sold-out audience in Greeuwich Village, the band made a grand entrance to the whine of a bag-pipe and the pounding of handheld African drums. Such an entrance is calculated to startle and disorient the audience, says Amir Gwirtzman, the band's saxophonist, bagpipe player and master of nearly a dozen obscure wind instruments.

"What we want to do is turn our concerts into a kind of Middle Eastern party," Gwirtzman says. "We want to break down the wall between audience and performer. First people are surprised, and then we are closer to them."

Having reached out to the andience as something other than coolly professional musicians, the band tore into a composition entitled "Turkish Western." Musically speaking, it's a song in which a whirling dervish runs headlong into the sonudtrack from Sergio Leone's The Good, the Bad and the Ugly. The audience, clapping and smiling, had a hard time staying in their seats. (The Washington Post)

Treasury: No revision of NIS 800m. budget cuts

Neeman denies reports on differences with Frenkel

By DAVID HARRIS

The Finance Ministry is refusing to alter the details of the proposed additional NIS 800 million budget cut for this year, despite the threat of coalition MKs to vote against the plan, State Budget director David Milgrom said yesterday.

Prime Minister Binyamio Netanyahu, Finance Minister Yaakov Neeman and coalition leader in the Knesset Finance Committee Michael Kleioer (Gesher) were yesterday attempting to persuade MKs from Shas and the National Religious Party to support the cut and guarantee a majority in the committee when it votes on the cut this afternooo.

Yitzhak Cobeo and Nissim Dahan (both Sbas) and Zvi Hendel (NRP) are opposed to the Treasury-proposed, cabinet-approved cuts to the education and social welfare bnd-

"The thinking in the Treasury is to give up on [the vote of] the NRP and bope to gaio the support of Shas," said Kleiner. "But it is not bealthy to only rely on a majority of OTE

"This is really oot wise," said Kleiner. "In the short-term this may succeed, but will create a real long-term problem for the fund-

While saying there is a good chance the proposal will be approved, Kleiner argued it is unbealthy for a coalition to pass measures without full agreement.

However, in the Treasury, both Neeman and his senior officers were remaining firm in their determination to implement the budget cut unaltered.

"There will be no change at all," said Milgrom. "The cut was approved by the ministers.

On Sunday, Milgrom, under instructions from Neeman, was forced to withdraw the proposal from the Finance Committee, minutes before MKs were to vote, when it became clear there would be oo government majority.

Immediately after the anticipated vote on the cut, ministers will meet for the third time this week to discuss the 1998 budget and a Treasury bloeprint for some 100 structural Milgrom admitted yeslerday the Treasury bas still not formulated its proposals for tax reforms. Initially, seoior Treasury officials boped to implement the changes as part of the 1998 budget plan. However, this now seems unlikely, with Milgrom refusing to say exactly when the tax proposals will be brought to government for approval.

The principle aim of the changes will be to reduce the overall tax burden, but the Treasury is still hunting for appropriate alternative sources for state revenues, said Milgrom. The Treasury is also re-examining the proportions of income paid to the state in each tax bracket.

Meanwhile, Neeman yesterday issued a statement denying reports that he and Bank of Israel Governor Jacob Frenkel are in deep disagreement over the governmeot's desired inflatioo target for fiscal 1998.

"I have no argument with the governor, we are both facing the same problem, namely reducing inflation and leading the Israeli economy back to a growth path," be said. Neemao endorses the Treasury bureacracy's view that the inflation target should be 7%-10%,, while the central bank is calling for a target of 6%-9%.

Vietnam plans stock market

HANOI, Vietnam (AP) — A draft plan for Vietnam's first stock exchange has been submitted to the government for review, official media reported Monday. The state-run Saigon Times reported that the draft was prepared by the State Securities Commission last week during discussions about setting up a stock exchange in Ho Chi Minh City. It said that the exchange could open as soon as September, although western observers believe that is unlikely. Central bank officials refused comment on the report. Only a dozen Vietnamese companies have been privatized while about 6,300 others are still under state ownership.

Eitan demands increase in civilian R&D

Science Minister Michael Ettan has demanded that the govemment establish a long-term plan to increase the budget for civilian research and development - from 2.1% of the Gross National Product to 3% over the next five years.

In the cabinet discussion of structural changes in the economy, Eitan argued that many discussions have been held on investments in physical infrastructure, such as roads, but they have "disregarded the need to invest in scientific and technological infrastructure that constitutes the basis for industry and bigh-Judy Siegal tech products."

Microsoft's latest good news

By RAJIV CHANDRASEKARAN

(The Washington Post) - The biggest beneficiary of software giant Microsoft Corp.'s decision last week to invest $150 million in its financially struggling rival Apple Computer Inc. may be Microsoft itself.

The alliance keeps alive an attractive business io selling software for Apple's Macintosh conputers; one that is estimated by analysts at about $300m. a year. It also gives Microsoft potentially more important advantages in selling its Internet browsing software, deflecting antitrust concerns and setting global standards for the bot new Java programming technology, several industry specialists - said Thursday.

Microsoft has been locked in a battle with some of Silicon Valley's biggest companies, iocluding Sun Microsystems Inc., Netscape Communications Corp. and Oracle Corp., over Java. Programs written in Java. which was developed by Sun, can be shared over the Internet and, most importantly, can run on different types of computers without revisions.

Java, which is widely seen as the next big trend in computing, could help boost sales of computers made by Sun, International Business Machines Corp. and Winnitski said. others that don't rely on Microsoft's popular Windows operating system. Fearing this, Microsoft has been promoting a version of Java that's tied ioto Windows. The deal with Apple is expected to help advance that effort, a critical task for Microsoft, analysts said. This is where computing is heading, and Microsoft wants to define the standards, said Walter J. Winnitski, an analyst with Paice Webber, Inc. in New York. This is a big way for them to do that. Although Macintoshes represent only a small fraction of all personal computers sold - about 3.8 percent worldwide in the second quarter of this year - Apple's machines are uncommooly important in creating software and content on the Internet.

Apple's co-founder, Steve Jobs, boasted Wednesday that 80% of World Wide Web sites were designed with Macs.

They carry a big stick there, which is going to help Microsoft, By helping to keep Apple afloat, which effectively gives personal computer customers an option other than Microsoft's Windows software, Microsoft also helps deflect concerns that it bas become too dominant in the computer industry, legal specialists said.

For its part, Microsoft maintains that blunting antitrust concerns was not a factot in the investmeot.

Uoder the terms of the deal, Apple has promised to make Microsoft's Internet Explorer browsiog software the easiest choice to use for new Macintosh customers. That gives Microsoft a much-needed leg up in its com-petitioo with browser-maker Netscape. It leverages their presence against Netscape, said Richard G. Shurlund, a Goldman, Sachs & Co. analyst.

In addition, Apple has promised not to resurrect a failed lawsuit alleging that Microsoft stole the look and feel of the in developing Macintosh Windows.

Some industry watchers, bowever, cautioned that although Apple has a vocal, devoted following, the collaboratioo with Microsoft will have only a limited impact because of Apples relatively small market share.

The Apple Macintosh market is a fringe business, said Andrew C. Brosseau, an analyst at Cowen &

For oow, the financial impact of the proposed investment looks to be very beoeficial to Microsoft. The $150m. would be used to purchase non-voting sbares of Apple stock at an average of recent closiog prices before Tuesday, wheo Apple stock hovered in the high teens. In the last two days, bowever, Apple's stock bas climbed $9.43<sup>1</sup>/4, a 48% jump from Tuesday's close, which would make Microsoft's stake worth far more than what it paid.

Putting your money where your house is

By NEIL COHEN

Two weeks ago, 1 wrote about the options available to savers now that interest rates have fallen quite significant-ly. This week 1 intend to create some model savings portfolios based on those options.

First, though, a couple of anec-dotes to put this issue into context. Last week I met the head of private banking at one of the big banks. He seemed like a solid, prudent guy. He told me that a couple of years ago he wrote a letter to me which he never sent. It was in response to a column I wrote, in which I said that my gut inclination was to keep most of my savings in foreign currency, though this feeling was as emotional as it was rational, or words to that effect. He wanted to tell me how violently he disagreed with me - that assets should he matched to liabilities - and to inform me about all of the advantages of shekel savings. In another scenario, a family friend asked my advice on provid-ing for his beirs. He lives here yet most of his savings are dollar denominated (he hails from the US). Together with his pension etc. he has a pretty standard retirement portfolio invested in a mixture of bonds, cash, stocks and mutual funds. Without going into detail, his income far exceeds his expenditure.

looking for a decent income based on a conservative investment strategy. He wanted to know if I would advise him to shift anything more than a token portion of his assets into shekel instruments. I might suggest putting a little money into CPI-linked savings plans to build up some protection against Israeli inflation, but more than that?

Perhaps I'm being unpatriotic, but I believe the risks on shekel interest vs. shekel devaluation and especially inflation vs. shekel devaluation against the dollar are far greater on the former side of each equation than on the latter. It might be a great arbitrage for nimble-footed traders and arbitrageurs, and indeed a strategy which would have made money over the last few years, but it isn't right for the retiree readers of The Jerusalem Post. I'm yet to he convinced that the shekel is a hard enough currency, or that it's valued fairly enough just look at the currency turmoil in Southeast Asia right now.

All this doesn't mean that I would recommend to the average wage earner that he or she convert every spare shekel into dollars and invest abroad. For most of os, that is impractical and highly tax-inefficient.

The strategies detailed in the mize his income to the last penny or even the last thousand dollars. He's generated in this country. I've put generated in this country. I've put together three portfolios assuming savings of NIS 75,000, NIS 250,000 and NIS 500,000 across three age groups, 35, 50 and 65. The 35 year old has plenty of earning years left. He should be saving for the long term with minimal concern for short-term income. The 50 year old can afford less of a risk, though he can still invest for growth. And the 65 year old, while wanting inflation protection, is most concerned with maximizing his retirement income.

These portfolios are relatively low risk, generating reasonable returns and affording decent infla-tion protection. Only the shortterm deposits, or makamim, are seriously exposed to inflation tisk. I would probably tweak the stock market exposure a little higher, especially in the portfolios for 35 and 50 year olds, if the market priced more reasonably, but at current levels I'm nervous, hence the cautious exposure level.

For the savings plans, make sure to shop around among the banks for the one offering the best rate at the time and then start negotiating. The same goes for the short-term deposits. The equities should he either a selection of blue-chip stocks or alternatively a couple of very boring, long track-record

LONDON (Bloomherg) - Iranian President Mohammed Khatami replaced long-time oil and foreign ministers in a proposed cahinet that signals a more moderate line in the country's relations with the outside world.

The cabinet, presented to the Majlis (parliament) for approval, includes ministers who have openly advocated talks with the United States, which Iran coosiders the archenemy. The Majlis is expected to approve or reject the proposed ministers by August 20. Oil Minister Gholamreza Aghazadeh lost his job to Bijan Namdar Zanganeh, a civil engineer known for his managerial skills. He also takes credit for rebuilding the coun-try's power industry, which was heavily hombed during the 1980-88 Iran-Iraq war. Analysts doo't expect any change in Iran's oil policy, though they expect Zanganeh to pursue a more vigorous campaign to attract foreign investment to the couotry.

"Overall, there will not be a hig change in analyst with the Center for Global Energy Studies in London. "Zanganeh will capitalize on Khatami's positive image abroad to push more aggressively to get foreign investors to Iran."

Khatami, who won a landslide victory in May, also replaced Foreign Minister Ali Akhar Velayati, who has been in the post for 16 years. The proposed foreign minister, Kamal Kharazi, has long been an advocate of frieodly relations with Iran's neighbors, especially with the conservative Persian Gulf Arab states, including Saudi Arabia.

yesterday despite an unsteady start on Wall Street, with London climbing nearly one percent on the back . that windfall flotation payments of a strong showing by oil compames.

In currency markets, the dollar jumped a pfennig after the Bundesbank kept its key repo rate steady at 3.00 percent, although many traders felt that the threat of rising German rates remained inthe market.

The stronger showing on European bourses followed Monday's lackluster start to the week, when investors were shaken by a sharp Wall Street fall on Friday that brought fears that the recent bull run was petering out. London led the way yesterday, climbing 45.2 points to 5077.2 on the FTSE 100 index in the afternoon, shrugging off a negative start on Wall Street, with gains in British Petroleum and Shell outpacing a sell-off in pharmaceutical stocks.

"The drugs have underperformed but I think that is a little overdone...and the market looks pretty firm," one trader said. " The FTSE 100 index, which closed only just in the plus column on Monday, was at one stage trading only a few below its all-time peak of 5,086.8

set last Thursday Paris. Stocks climbed 0.89 percent at the opening on bullish sentiment after the Bundesbank move, but fost most of the gains. A modest pick-up on Wall Street by midafternoon failed to help.

In Frankfurt, floor trade stocks closed up 0.7 percent, encouraged by the dollar's recent strength, which boosts prospects for exporters. After-hours deals on the computerized IBIS index were up

Currency markets were firmly focused on the Bundesbank with traders digesting the effect of the

"no-change" rate move. The dollar staged a minor rally after the Bundesbank's announcement, but it failed to build up monetum during the session and paused at 1.8650 marks, up about a pfennig on Monday's close, Initially the dollar benefited when the Bundesbank left the repo rate at three percent, but it didn't go too far," said Lisa Finstrom, senior currency analyst at Smith Barney in New York.

Few market players expected to see either an outright hike in the German repo rate or a switch to variable-rate tenders. The markets were kept guessing over the Bundesbank's next move.

Springer, a retired Air Force lieutenant general, said the foundation wanted to build between the Iwo Jima Memorial and the Netherlands Carillon because the site is near the Fort Myer parade grounds in north-em Virginia, where Orville Wright first demonstrated flight to the military in 1908.

On Thursday, the Marine Corps hranch headquarters issued a statement through Lt.-Col. Scott Campbell, saying it supports an Air Force memorial but not at that site.

"We just didn't know about it," Campbell said. "The level of awareness among Corps leadership has increased, and obviously it has increased our concern about the plans." Springer said he was surprised at the Marines' response because he had received support in the past from Marine officials.

NEW YORK (AP) - Stocks dropped sharply in the final hour of trading yesterday after bond yields shot higher on concerns of building points lower to close at 7,960.84. Broad-market indexes were lower along with the Dow. The 30-year Treasury bond was down 7-16 point, pushing its yield, inflation which rises when prices fall, to

Solomon was concerned about "the impact the Air Force Memorial would have on one of the most recognizable memorials in the whole country," said spokesman Bill Teator, "It would be so close as to be a distraction."

Foundation Executive Director Robert Springer said Solomon's action would not deter the foundation from continuing to refine the design and raise funds for the $25 million, star-shaped memorial.

"We respect Rep. Solomon's thought that the Iwo Jima Memorial is very special not only to the Marines but to a lot of Americans," Springer said. "However, we have worked diligently not to encroach on the Iwo Jima Memorial and to protect its sanctity."

GOLD RUSH - Wilson Kipketer will try to earn himself a kilo of gold in Zurich tonight by breaking the 800m world record.

Kipketer looks to break Coe's 800m record in Zurich tonight

ZURICH (Reuters) - Denmark's former Kenyan Wilson Kipketer will try to erase the oldest and most prestigious world record from the books today and, with it, the name of one of the reatest middle-distance numers ever - Britain's Sebastian Coe.

After equalling Coe's world record of one minute 41.73 seconds for the 800 meters in Stockholm earlier in the season, the double world champion will run in the most lucrative grand prix meeting in athletics looking to make history and more than $130,000.

Last week Kipketer made the defence of his world 800 title in Athens in 1:43.38 look easy. With the help of pacemakers and a still warm night in the Swiss city, the 26-year-old should be in a good position to take the record into new territory.

Kipketer was just a 10-year-old growing up in Kenya when Coe breezed around a track in Florence to set the world record in June 1981 with one of the most astonishing middle-distance performances of all time:

Twice last season Kipketer, who went to live in Denmark in 1990, neared the world record after 9.84 seconds could also be in danger when the missing the Atlanta Olympics because he was not cleared to run for his adopted country.

There is a feeling in the athletics world - shared by Coe - that it is only a matter of time before he betters Coe's mark.

From his bank manager's point of view, there is no better place to produce a world record than at the Weltklasse meeting

Organizers of the Zurich event are reluctant to anunounce world record attempts in advance. But the financial incentive is always there.

A world record is worth $50,000 in cash plus one kilo of gold. Kipketer could expect to earn a fee of at least $80,000 for just stepping out on to the track. In addition, his shoe sponsors would be expected to give him a huge bonus for breaking new ground in the sport.

Some 25 champions, 22 silver and 20 bronze medalists from the Athens championships are scheduled to compete in a meeting which is known on the circuit as the "the one-night Olympics.* Donovan Bailey's 100 meters world record of Canadian takes on newly-crowned world champion Maurice Greene in a sprint field containing seven of the eight finalists from Athens.

Bailey is hoping to compete despite hurting a groin muscle when he anchored Canada to their sprint relay triumph at the weekend.

American women's sprint champion Marion Jones will also take on a high-class field over 100 meters which includes former world champions Gwen Torrence and Gail Devers.

Britain's Roger Black, not selected for the individual 400 meters in Athens amid controversy at home, has a chance for a shot at world and Olympic champion Michael Johnson.

The Zurich crowd can expect a fascinating battle in the 5,000 meters between Kenya's world champion Daniel Komen and Ethiopia's Haile Gebrselassie of Ethiopia who set the world record of 12:44.39 on the same track two years ago. Komen said on Monday the race was too soon after his triumph in Athens on Sunday for a world record. But if conditions are good, Zurich regulars know that athletics history can be made at any

Betar in tough test against Sporting Lisbon

By DEREK FATTAL

Betar Jerusalem host Sporting Lisbon, one of the grand old clubs of Europe tonight at Teddy Stadium in the first leg of the second preliminary round of the European Champions' Cup. The victor over the two legs will advance into the lucrative Champions' League where the likes of current holders Borussia Dortmund, Juventus, Barcelona and Manchester United lie in wait. No Israeli club has managed to t past the current stage. Maccabi Tel Aviv came despairingly close against Grasshopper Znrich two years ago, and failed again last season against Turkey's Fenerbache.

On paper Sporting Lisbon are a better side than the last two oppo-nents drawn against the Tel Avivians in the competition. In fact, the Portuguese titlists founded in 1906, are no strangers to these shores, having played Maccabi Haifa in the European Cup Winners' Cup first preliminary round two years ago. The Haifaites were no match for Sporting who pulverized Maccabi 4-0 in the first leg in Portugal, and then drew 0-0 in what turned out to be a lazy kickabout on Israeli

It will be no comfort for Betar fans that Pedro Barbosa, the man who hit three goals past Haifa back in September 1994, is likely to be in Octavio Machado's starting line-up. Some will however draw hope from the fact that the Portuguese have not been too impressive in European competition over the last couple of seasons. After beating Haifa they were knocked out in the next preliminary round by Rapid Vienna, while in last season's UEFA Cup, the side were rudely stopped in the second preliminary stage by France's Metz.

Nevertheless Sporting mounted a superb league campaign last year to seize the title from FC Porto, their first championship since 1981-82, and many pundits in Portugal feel that the squad has been strengthened significantly over the last six months thanks to a cintch of new transfers. In accordance with national tradition, the side excels in midfield, where Barbosa on the right wing is likely to be accompanied this evening by Oceano, French-sign-ing Didier Lang, Morroco's Mustapha Hadji, and former-Gremio Porto Alegre (Brazil) star Carlos Miguel.

Barbosa is likely to be the danger man as most good things continue to stem from his dazzling runs. The Jerusalemites cannot afford to forget the club's $5 million summer signing from Spain's Valencia, Brazilian international forward Leandro, who is capable of giving Betar's defense the most severe test it has ever faced.

Over 500 fans watched the two sides training at Teddy yesterday evening. The good news for the Jerusalemites is that Yossi Abuksis looked to have overcome his injury yesterday, and moved freely and confidently around the field. Together with central defender David Amsalem and Alon Harazi, Abuksis has a key role in trying to tame the Portuguese as they come forward, as well as keeping Istvan Pishont and the rest of the Betar midfield supplied with the ball.

To have a sporting chance of surviving the return encounter before a crowd of 50-60,000 passionate souls in the return leg in Lisbon, the Jerusalemites have to be looking to at least a 2-0 victory tonight, and cannot afford to concede even a single goal. The odds may be long, but the chances of collecting are wafer thin.

Despite protracted haggling between officials from the two clubs, the game kick-off time will be at 20:00, as originally scheduled with UEFA. Betar had tried to get the match brought forward by two hours so that it could be televised live here, but the visitors refused to the scheduling change, claiming that they had prepared for the later time since finding out who their opponents would be. There will, however, he live commentary on Radio 2.

Hapoel PT return from Denmark with goalless draw By ORI LEWIS

Hapoel Petah Tikva can take great heart from their 0-0 draw with Denmark's Vejle in the UEFA Cup second preliminary round first-leg last night. According to reports from the ground, the Danes held the upper hand for most of the match, although towards the end, Motti Kakkon had a chance to clinch victory for the Danes' post. Some 3,000 spectators watched proceedings. The Petah Tikvans now have the luxury of settling the result at home.

visitors, but his shot hit the

They must win the match, a score draw would see the Danes through on the away goals rule, while an extra-time goal would spell sudden death for the team on the receiving

If no result is reached by the end of 120 minutes, the match will he decided on penalties.

Last night's result is all the more heartening for Petah Tikva, after the scam let in no fewer than six goals and scored only two in both their National League outings so far this season. They must make sure there is no such repetition of this poorform against the Danes.

DEADLINES OF

There could surely be no more appropriate metaphor to the summer than the sight of a forlorn Michael Atherton sitting on the England balcony watching his batsmen being picked off by the Australian attack on Sunday after-

Atherton casually spun what looked like a yo-yo from hand to hand, and yes, you have guessed it, a quick lack nf concentration, and over the balcony it went. At the end of the second-innings debacle, while the jubilant Aussies were pouring champagne over their balcony, Atherton was left to consider how a summer which had started with so much hope - a whitewash in the one-day Texaco Trophy and victory in the first Test - could end in such a humiliating fashion.

Not surprisingly, the knives in the press box were being sharpened as the England players came and went through the Trent Bridge pavilion. John Etheridge in The Sun reckons that Atherton's time as captain will be measured in "hours, rather than days," while the Daily Telegraph's Christopher Martin Jenkins described England's downfall as a "vainglorious and lemming-like dash to destruction.

In true English-cricket-administration style, chairman of selectors David Gravency gave his full backing to Atherton saying be expected him to lead the team for the final Test at the Oval next week, and possibly for the winter tour to the Caribbean. A shrewd betting punter would be wise not to back such a scenario. My money is on Nasser Hussain for the joh this winter,

Some of the England team used the well-worn eliches about playing too much cricket as an excuse for their demise. They might like to take a leaf out of the book of one Jim Harris, who at 86 is England's oldest club player, keeping wicket for Overton in one of the minor Birmingham leagues. BBC Radio interviewed Harris at the weekend, the former mayor of Birmingham admitted to playing for Overton for 70 years and has no intention of retiring.

THE football season opened in style over the weekend with no celebrating their FA Cup triumph while Coventry were walking on a tightrope towards the First Division.

In the good old days of football when clubs were run hy local shopkeepers, scrap metal dealers and the like, fans would generally have the chance to brush shoulders and exchange a few pleasantries with their club chairmen at the local Marks and Spencer. But now, consortia is the buzzword with huge multi-national conglomerates dictating the shape and future of clubs hundreds of miles away from boardrooms in London, or in the case of Wimhledon since their recent takeover, from Norway.

One shop-owner in evidence on Saturday was Mohammed Fayed, proprietor of that well-known corner store Harrods, who was at Craven Cottage on Saturday to see his new toy Fulham FC start their Second Division season with a 1-0 win over Wrexham, Nearly 9,000 fans turned up, some wearing a fez, to salute the man who has been described as the savior to take Fulham to the Premiership.

There's a long way to go, and next Saturday, it's hack to breadand-butter for Fulham, as they travel to Walsall. It will be interesting to see whether Fayed will be on the team bus. With all the hype surrounding the foreign players, (on the opening day of the season in 1992 77 percent of the players were British, on Saturday, the WINNING PLAY - Atlanta Braves right fielder Michael Tucker catches a line drive off the bat of Florida Martins' Charles Johnson saving a run in the second inning number was down to just 54%). at Turner Field. Atlanta won 2-1. There was a great deal of anti-climax at Elland Road on Saturday in the Leeds-Arsenal game. All four of Arsenal's Frenchmen were booked and the visiting fans must have been wondering how Arsene Wenger was persuaded to part with £6 million of the clnh's money for Marc Overmars when they could have upped the stakes over Leeds for the Dutch striker Jimmy Floyd Hasselbaink who scored a beauty for the Leeds equalizer. Johansson says time for European to run FIFA president Lennart Johansson said on Monday it was time a European ran world soccer and suggested outgning FIFA hoss Joao Havelange owed him an explanation for recent remarks.

"I admire Havelange for what he has done for world soccer in 25 years. But times have changed and the FIFA presidency should return in Europe," Jnhansson said.

The Swede has already declared himself as Europe's candidate to replace Havelange when the 80-year-old Brazilian steps down as FIFA head next year.

Havelange has made no secret that he does not back Johansson's hid and said last month that Argentine soccer federation president Julio Grondona would be a good candidate to replace him.

"We must fight, especially against European countries who want to place their candidates at the helm of world soccer," he was quoted as saying at the time.

Johansson said he had no problems with Havelange despite media reports suggesting animosity.

"Havelange has always treated me correctly. But I have read certain statements which - if they BELGRADE (Remers) - UEFA are true - he will have to explain," said Johansson. He said that although European soccer greats such as Michel Platini and Franz Beckenbauer had been mentioned as possible npponents for the FIFA joh, all had hacked him publicly. "If anynne wants to challenge me, they will have to start now, otherwise it will be too late," said Johansson. "I like fighting." The Swede was in Belgrade at the invitation of the Yugoslav soccer federation on a visit intended primarily to improve relations between the national federation and the European governing body. Johansson is resented hy many local soccer fans as the man responsible for ousting Yugoslavia from the 1992 European championship in Sweden, a decision which allowed Denmark to enter and win. Johansson also reiterated UEFA's decision to allow only one national soccer federation in Bosnia.

"Teams from the three (ethnic communities) in Bosnia can play in their own regions, but they must also play among each other and choose one winner.

"As long as they don't obey this, they are not welcome in the UEFA cups," said Johansson, adding the problem could be resolved at a meeting next week.

Lewis attacks softening of drugs bans

By ADRIAN WARNER

ZURICH-Carl Lewis on Monday attacked athletics chiefs for softening their penalties on drug cheats and warned that the sport was heading in the wrong direction. Lewis said track and field's governing body, the International Amateur Athletic Federation (IAAF), had picked the wrong time to cut its bans for serious drugs like steroids from four to two years because of legal problems.

"At a time when everybody thinks the sport is dirty...What's the message?" the nine-times. Olympic champion said before today's Zurich Weltklasse meeting.

"They (the cheats) know that they can come back before the next (Olympic) Games (after a two-year ban). I am not comfortable with the direction of track and field." The IAAF voted to abandon four-year bans just before this month's world championships in Athens because they were widely regarded as being too harsh under restraint of trade legislation and athletes could go to court and win.

The move has been attacked by some top athletes including Britain's former Olympic 100 metres champion Linford Christie. The Athens championships showed that some athletes are still trying to cheat their way to glory. Five tested positive for banned drugs at the event, including two medallists.

The 36-year-old Lewis, the most successful and popular figure in the sport, says he does not plan to take on an official role in US athletics when he retires from racing next month.

They are not addressing the drug problem. properly. They are not promoting the sport properly. Lewis said. T am going to be doing things for young people but not under the anspices of the IAAF or USA Track and Field (the national federation)."

But he added: "I have had a great time, made a lot of money and retired with an Olympic medal...I love the sport." Lewisplans to be involved in projects to encourage children to take up physical exercise after he runs his final race on September 13 in Houston where he went to university.

But first there is the most lucrative meeting of the athletics season in Zurich to contend with,

The reigning Olympic long jump champion and his manager Joe Douglas have often been at odds with the US national federation over the years because they feel the sport has not been run properly in the country.

Despite the success of athletes like Lewis and double Olympic champion Michael Johnson and the enthusiastic crowds at last year's Atlanta Olympics, track and field is struggling to compete with other sports in the US

It does not enjoy the same popularity as it does in Europe and there are no US meetings close to matching the hig money of the Weltklasse where a world record is worth $50,000 and major athletes can earn around $80,000 just for turning up. Lewis is running the 100 meters in Zurich but is not due to compete against the likes of newly-crowned world champion Maurice Greene and Canada's Olympic champion Donovan Bailey.

Organizers said they expected the Canadian to run despite hurring a groin muscle in the sprint relay in Athens on Sunday.

Lewis, a former 100 meters world record holder who effectively gave up top-class athletics after his long jump triumph in Atlanta, said he did not mind missing out on the big

"Been there. Done that," he said. "I am looking forward to retiring and the next phase of my life. I am ready to retire."

Lewis is leaving the sport at the same time as Christie who announced at the weekend that he was finally quitting after several false starts at leaving the game.

"I hope he is happy with the decision," Lewis said.

"He was one of my fiercest competitors and I have a lot of respect for him." (Reuters)

*** GROSSE POINTE BLANK - In this mordant little comedy, John Cusack plays a professional assassin who returns to his Michigan hometown for the first time in a decade to attend his high-school reunion. The joke, of course, is that Cusack looks more milkman than hitman: he has searching eyes, pudgy cheeks and the lanky build of a teenager, and despite he fact that cold-blooded murder is bis character's line of work, he blushes and can't keep his voice from going fluttery when he's reunited with his old girlfriend (Minnie Driver). Directed by George Armitage, the film beloogs to an emotionally limited but amusing category of hip satirical picture - of which Heathers is probably the classic example - that treat adolescence io the American suburbs as the hanal, oppermiddle-class equivalent of coming of age in hell. With Dan Aykroyd, Alan Arkin and Joan Cusack, John's reallife sister. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Children under 17 not admitted without an adult.)

**** AFTERGLOW - Alan Rudolph's complicated prism of a film focuses on a pair of trouhled couples (Julie Christie and Nick Nolte, Lara Flynn Boyle and Jonny Lee Miller) caught at different, desperate stages in their lives and loves. The movie takes Rudolph's usual romantic sensitivity even further, into the Keatsian realm of negative capability: "when man is capable of being in uncertainties." Not only does the director clearly empathize in varying but intense degrees with at least three of the main characters aod their contradictory desires, he asks of us that we do the same. To a great extent he succeeds, largely because of bis wonderful actors, but also because he shows an unusual willingness to let a scene hover between apparently irreconcilable tones (gloom and silliness, say) and between traditionally incompatible forms (soap opera and slapstick). In the hands of a lesser director, this might just make for a wishy-washy movie. As in all of his best work, though, Rudolph piles on so much powerful sentiment, the result is incredibly - almost tooth-achingly - rich, only more complex and alive for its overflow of unspoken emotion. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Not recommended for children.)

**** PRIVATE PARTS - Based on the autobiography of the rude, crude New York radio persocality, Howard Stern, Betty Thomas's film is one of the more entertaining bits of celebrity self-aggrandizement to surface io a long time. Actually, the movie - which stars Stern as himself - works by mesns of a clever hlend of self-love and self-mockery, as it also further develops the tricky trompe-l'oeil technique that he has perfected oo his WNBC radio show. To hear Stern tell it, oo subject is off limits for oo-air discussion. His improvised banter appears to be hrutally honest and totally intimate, and his massive public appeal is based on the fact that his honesty knows oo bounds. While such total frankness is a fine claim to fame, it is, of course, not true. Stem's straighttalking, wise-cracking radio persona is just that - a persooa. And if there's one thing that his inspired movie debut makes clear it's that he is, above all, a fantastic actor, a man who has cast himself in the part of soul-bearing vulgarian and thoroughly mastered the role. Featuring a blend of actors and real-life media personalities, as themselves. (English dialogue, Hebrew subtitles. Childreo under 17 oot admitted without an adult.)

Klinghoffer daughters settle with PLO

By MARILYN HENRY

The PLO has reached an "amicable" settlement with the daughters of Leon Klinghoffer a dozen years after his slaying in the Achille Lauro hijacking, and just before the $1.9 hillion lawsuit was set to go to trial in New York.

The settlement. fnr an undisclosed sum, was approved last week by US District Court Judge Louis Stanton in Manhattan, The New York Times reported yesterday.

Klinghoffer's daughters, Ilsa and Lisa, were "pleased that the long-standing litigation has been scttled amicably," a family spokesman told the Times. The PLO admitted no wrongdoing. It maintained that the 1985 commandeering of the Italian cruise liner off the Egyptian coast, and murder of 69-year-old wheelchair-bound Klinghoffer, a tourist from New York, was the work of a rebel faction over which PLO leader Yasser Arafat had no control. Abu Abbas, bead of the Palestine Liberation Front, was convicted in absentia in Italy of master- tion and the trial was scheduled minding the hijacking.

14th Mahaneh Yehuda victim buried

Eli Adourian, the 14th victim of the July 30 Mahaneh Yehuda suicide bombing, was huried yesterday in his hometown of Kfar Adumim.

Adourian, 49, who sold vegetables in the Jerusalem market, died Monday after his lungs collansed.

Hundreds of people attended his funeral, including OC Central Command Uzi Dayan and Third Way MK Emmanuel Zisman. "You had strength of character that is very rarely seen, someone whose voice is heard even after you have left us," his brother Eli said. "I saw you build your life, piece by piece, the end found you." Rabbi Gavriel Goldman, the rabbi of Kfar Adumim, said, "On Tisha Be'av, the grief of Jewish people mixes with personal grief.

Mourning touches mourning, blood touches blood.

"You were a man of truth who always sought answers and weighed things, but you always invested in your learning and in raising your children.

Adourian left a wife, two sons, and two daughters. (lüm)

IDF indicts Noam Friedman for attempted murder

By Jerusalem Post Staff

Noam Friedman was indicted yesterday by the Central District Military Court fnr attempted murder, mutiny, and attempt to suborn murder.

The charges stem from an incident January 1, when Friedman, 22, a soldier from Ma'aleh Adumim serving in a logistical unit based near Jerusalem, fired abnut 20 ballets into the Hebron casbah, before being wrestled to the ground and subdued by a Nahal officer and two soldiers. Six Palestinians were wounded, two of them serinusly. Friedman said he was attempting to scuttle the planned redeplnyment from Hebron.

Prime Minister Binyamin Netanyahn Called Palestinian Authority Chairman Yasser Arafat at the time and condemned the attack as an act that repulsed every person of conscience.

IDF psychiatrists had raled that Friedman was insane at the time of the shooting and unfit to stand trial. He was discharged from the army and had been held in the Kfar Shaul Psychiatric Hospital In Jerusalcm, which allowed him out to attend yeshiva classes and to visit his home.

Friedman was committed to the closed ward from January 31 to June 29, then transferred to an open ward for continued treatment nver the past six weeks. A new psychiatric evaluation submitted to the military court on Monday found him competent to stand trial. Eyen though he is now a civil-ian, Friedman is liable to trial in a military court for his actions as a soldier.

The main charge against him states that Friedman opened fire "in the center of the city of Hebron with the purpose of causing the deaths of Arabs."

The indictment also notes that he is still considered to be dangerous, "although the strength of this danger bas been moderated hy hospitalizating and medical treatment.

Nonetheless, the court issued a writ of commitment, "in light of Friedman's dangcrousness, which apparently has been demonstrated by the acts described in the indictment, and in view of the defendant's continuing illness."

The prosecution agreed for Friedman to continue to be confined at Kfar Shanl during the proceedings against him.

Broza posts NIS 300,000 bond for alleged tax evasion

Folk singer David Broza was brought to court yesterday for approval of bond for alleged tax evasion, which the judge reduced after finding it excessive. Tel Aviv Magistrate's Court Judge George Kara said the bond of NIS 350,000 which Broza was asked to post was unnecessarily high, and reduced it to NIS 300.000.

"Presumably Broza wouldo't have absconded from the law even if he had posted a bond of NIS 50,000 less," the judge said.

The authorities say the 42-year-old Broza owes NIS 25,000 on earnings of some NIS 100,000 while abroad.

Senior Inspector Baruch Yitzhaki alleged that Broza had deliberately failed to accurately report his income.

Broza's attorney, Lior Epstein, denied the charges. He said his client has been negotiating the issue with the authorities for a year and has not been beyond their reach. (Itim)
